DUE DATE:
MONDAY, 10/02/2020, 4PM

You are required to identify and analyze an example for application of columns/axial members in real life. The analysis should include (but not limited to) the followings:

- Provide schematic diagrams and photos that show application of a column/axial member in real life. Explain function of the member for the selected application.
- Identify and determine:
  - Boundary/end conditions (support for the column/axial member such as fixed to the wall, pin supported and etc.).
  - External axial load that act onto the column/axial member. Show all the calculations performed in order to estimate the axial load.
  - Properties of the column/axial member (such as Young's modulus, yield/ultimate stress, proportional limit, cross section (provide figure), dimensions and etc.).
- Calculate the reactions (reaction moment, reaction force, etc).
- Determine critical load and critical stress for the column/axial member. Justify selection of the formulas for the calculations.
- Calculate and show that the column/axial member is safe and can withstand the load in part b. ii).
- Determine the maximum allowable eccentricity for the column/axial member.
- Determine the maximum deflection of the column/axial member (at the center) based on the eccentricity calculated in part f.

List down all the assumptions made. Provide relevant references and citations.
